INTRODUCTION

According to Harold D. Lasswell, communication is the process of delivering a message by the communicator to the communicant through a medium in order to produce a certain effect. One of the media used to convey the message is language; therefore, the role of language itself is considered important in the process of delivering the message.

AWESOME!

HOW LANGUAGE IS RELATED TO COMMUNICATION

The relationship between language and the communication process lies in the fact that language functions as the main tool for conveying messages, thoughts, and feelings between the communicator and the communicant. Without language, messages would be difficult to understand or even impossible to convey clearly.
